

Wallace Country

Clan Wallace has its traditional home in southwest Scotland, largely in Ayrshire and ranging north and east into Renfrewshire and Lanarkshire. Richard Wallace's first grants near Ayr were located around Riccarton (Richard's Town). Cadet branches emerged as the family's estates increased. Today, the castles and manor houses are in ruins and its considerable holdings and estates have long since passed from family hands. At the end of the 18th century, the chiefly line passed from the Wallaces of Craigie to the Wallaces of Cairnhill. In 1888, Captain Hugh Robert Wallace of Busbie and Clancaird established himself as Chief of the Clan and Name, and the chiefly line has since remained in that family. The current and 35th Chief of Clan Wallace, Ian Francis Wallace of that Ilk and his wife Teresa, currently reside in Edinburgh, Scotland. They have three children: Andrew, Henrietta, and James.

The Wallace Tartan

The Wallace Tartan is one of the most widely seen setts (patterns) today, easily ranking among the top five in popularity and usage. Based on the red and black-checked Rob Roy Tartan, it originated in the early 1820s when Wilson's of Bannockburn, the foremost tartan manufacturer of the era, first began to attribute specific setts to specific families. The two most common setts are red and green.

Who Are We?

CWS – The Clan Wallace Society

The Clan Wallace Society – Worldwide represents all Scots of any Clan and others who wish they were Scots.

Although mainly in North America, the Society has more than 1,200 members worldwide. The Society was founded and chartered in Texas in 1966. Wallaces reside in all corners of the globe and share common bonds of kinship and heritage, both to one another and with others of Scottish descent.

CWS Goes Beyond Braveheart!

CWS is Educational: Promotes the truth about Sir William Wallace, the national hero of Scotland who suffered martyrdom for his country in 1305; and teaches about Scottish heritage.

CWS has History: The history of the Clans and the heritage and achievements of those claiming Scottish descent, are explored.

CWS does Collection, Restoration, and Preservation: For places and objects of interest to the public in general and the family of Clan Wallace in particular. In Sept 1970, CWS announced the completion of the monument at Elderslie and the unveiling of six bronze-colored plaques—a project that the London Renfrewshire Association had begun in 1912. CWS made donations to the maintenance of the National Wallace Monument at Stirling. CWS members are active in ceremonies at the Wallace memorial in Baltimore, MD.

CWS Produces: CWS has been instrumental in the publication, republication, and distribution of works such as Rogers' The Book of Wallace, Seaver's Wallace Genealogical Data, and Mitchell's Wallaces of Elderslie. The founder of CWS, the late Charles B. Wallace's The Clan Wallace, now in its 3rd edition, is a comprehensive collection of family history and data. The Society has also placed its publications in 20 libraries nationwide and in Britain. At present, the Society's collections and archives are housed at the Ellen Payne Odom Genealogy Library in Moultrie, GA. CWS is translating the "Maitland Papers," from old French, English, Gaelic, Scots, and Latin to modern English.

CWS is: A sponsor of High Desert Pipes and Drums of Albuquerque, New Mexico, whose members proudly wear the Wallace Tartan.
